

Oil prices stabilise, for now

The trading week on markets got underway yesterday with the focus mainly centred on weekend developments in the Middle East. The conflict showed no signs of easing, with continued military action, including in the Strait of Hormuz. This 'escalatory' geopolitical backdrop was reflected in significant upward pressure on oil prices. Brent crude opened yesterday morning above the $90 per barrel threshold, reaching a high of $91.4. However, as the day progressed, prices eased back somewhat. Brent crude is trading this morning within a $88-89 p/b range.

From a risk appetite perspective, a very sparse macro data calendar yesterday, meant investors had little to occupy their minds other than the US-Iran war. Overall, there was a cautious tone to market sentiment. At the closing bell last night on Wall Street, the S&P 500 index was 0.2% lower on the day. On bond markets, UK gilts underperformed as investors waited for PM Burnham's pick for Chancellor of the Exchequer as well as contemplating what "flexibility" within the governments fiscal rules would entail.

On the currency front, the action amongst the majors was generally uneventful yesterday. This pattern was maintained in overnight trading on Asia-Pacific markets. This is evident in the main pairs operating this morning at levels broadly similar to 24 hours earlier. EUR/USD remains above the $1.14 mark and EUR/GBP continues to trade just below the 85p handle. Meanwhile, GBP/USD is changing hands in and around the midpoint of $1.34-1.35.

Today's macro diary has already seen the release of a raft of UK labour market updates. The unemployment rate printed slightly better than expected, remaining steady at 4.9% (vs. f'cast for 5.0%) in the three months to May. The Middle East conflict will remain a potential directional driver for markets over the course of today.
