

EUR/USD registers new YTD low

Investor sentiment was holding a cautious tone yesterday, as markets continued to recalibrate to the hawkish Fed messaging following the FOMC meeting last week. Equity markets fell on both sides of the Atlantic, led by a sell-off in the tech sector. The Euro Stoxx 50 declined by 1.3%. On Wall Street, the S&P 500 registered a similar 1.4% fall. Meantime, oil prices continued to move lower, with Brent crude prices edging down to $77 per barrel.

Data-wise, the flash PMIs were mixed across the main advanced economies in June. In the Eurozone, the surveys printed broadly in line with expectations, as the manufacturing sector continues to outperform services. Meantime in the UK, both sectors were weaker than anticipated. In contrast, the US PMIs were both stronger than forecast, and remain consistent with a solid pace of expansion.

On the currency front, the dollar remained firmly in the ascendancy yesterday. The greenback was partly supported by the solid PMI data. However, the main driver of the dollar strength once again seems to have been the recent firming in US rate expectations. This saw the dollar rise by 0.3-0.4% against the euro and sterling. EUR/USD recorded a fresh year-to-date low of $1.1362 overnight.

In level terms, the firmer tone to the dollar sees EUR/USD open today in the top half of the $1.13-1.14 range. GBP/USD is changing hands back below the $1.32 threshold. Meanwhile, EUR/GBP is in the lower half of the 86-87p corridor. USD/JPY remains in the upper region of the ¥161-162 band.

Turning to the day ahead, the macro data calendar is relatively sparse. The main release of note will be the bellwether German Ifo for June. The consensus is for a modest improvement in sentiment for the month. At the same time, remarks from a number of ECB and BoE officials will warrant attention.
