

Hawkish Fed, EUR/USD below $1.15

There was a wait-and-see tone to market sentiment for much of yesterday, as investors remained on the sidelines ahead of the US Fed's policy announcement and press conference, both scheduled for after the European close. The Fed, as expected, delivered a 25bps hike, with the fed funds rate rising to a 3.75-4.00% range. The updated dot plot, which Fed Chair Warsh once again refrained from participating in, showed that 16 of the 18 FOMC members expected to hike again this year (12 projecting 25bps, while 4 anticipating 50bps). Meanwhile, the tone of Chair Warsh's press conference leaned in a hawkish direction. He emphasised that the focus of the Fed is on achieving price stability.

The market reaction reflected the hawkish tone. The policy sensitive 2-year swap rate rose by around 5bps to above 4.8%, while futures contracts increased the probability of another 25bps rate hike by year end. The hawkish Fed tone and higher US rates/yields provided a supportive backdrop for the dollar. EUR/USD fell below the $1.15 threshold, while GBP/USD was unable to hold above $1.34. Elsewhere on the currency front, EUR/GBP continued to trade near to the midpoint of 85-86p.

Ahead today, investors will continue to digest last night's Fed outcome. However, the Bank of England will also come into focus, with their policy decision due. This presents a potential source of volatility for sterling. The BoE is expected to keep rates unchanged, at 3.75%. Therefore, if the BoE stays on hold, attention will be on the statement and minutes for insight as to whether the BoE is contemplating any near term rate hikes. The market is currently pricing in around 100bps of rate hikes over the next year. This seems excessive given subdued UK GDP growth as well as the lack of any major signs of a build-up in underlying inflationary pressures. Meantime, the BoJ is expected to hike rates by 25bps tonight.
