

US payrolls & core-PCE inflation due this week

There was a mixed tone to investor sentiment throughout last week. Initially, there was a positive mood on markets, amid hopes of some diplomatic progress between the US & Iran. However, as the week progressed, the newflow regarding the Middle East deteriorated. Meanwhile, market interest rate expectations firmed following a slew of hawkish remarks from central bankers particularly Fed officials, and on the back of some solid survey data.

Against this backdrop, Brent crude prices closed on Friday up circa 2%, above $104 per barrel. They have risen slightly further again at the start of this week, and are currently near $107 per barrel. On bond markets, German bund yields are 5-10bps higher on the week, while UK Gilt yields are up 8-16bps and US Treasury yields have risen by 15-20bps. At the same time, the Euro Stoxx 50 and the S&P 500 rallied on Friday to register gains of circa 1% last week.

On the currency front, the dollar was in the ascendancy throughout last week. The greenback was supported by the aforementioned hawkish Fed rhetoric, as well as the rise in oil prices and the cautious tone to investor sentiment in the middle of the week. Elsewhere, the yen and sterling were under some modest downward pressure.

In level terms, EUR/USD starts this week in the top half of the $1.13-1.14 range. GBP/USD is down in the lower half of $1.32-1.33. EUR/GBP is operating just below the 86p threshold. Meantime, USD/JPY is changing hands in and around the halfway mark of ¥157-158.

Turning to the week ahead, a busy US data calendar features the labour market report for September and core-PCE inflation for August. Both releases will garner significant attention. In the Eurozone, the flash reading of HICP inflation for September is due.
